JUNIOR ACHIEVEMENT – CATHY ELISIO

Cathy Elisio, Education Director of Junior Achievement Albany, outlined the program's mission and methods. JA is a private nonprofit economics organization providing education to K-12 children. They work with children in the greater Capital Region to help with work readiness, entrepreneurship and financial literacy, to allow them to succeed in the global economy. JA is not a government-funded program and depends on donations.

Volunteers, after having received training, teach programs in the classrooms in conjunction with the teachers. The program emphasizes the 4 C's: communication, collaboration, critical thinking and creativity. The program invites local business people in to the classroom to share their challenges and successes.

The programs are hands on and are grade level appropriate. K-6 classes work within the social studies curriculum and grades above that, within the economic and business curricula. The JA curriculum is relevant, important, and fun. Soft skills are also taught: how to meet/greet someone, how to dress for and participate in a job interview, etc.

One guiding tenet is the "Nobody can improve without a belief in themselves as well as having a sense of purpose".
